

ABSTRACT

A method determines range from a moving platform to an emitter. The method receives a RF signal from the emitter; counts a number of phase reversals of the received RF signal during a period of time; measures a Doppler
5 frequency during the period of time; and determines the range to the emitter based on both the number of counted phase reversals and the measured Doppler frequency.